Intussusception may occur in the lining of the intestines and may cause obstructions, which can lead to irritation of the intestines and the intestine lining. Intussusception may also indicate underlying problems such as inflammation or disorders. It can be painful and life-threatening. Intussusception may occur in children as young as 2 months old and the risk of recurrence increases with the age of the child. If a child has symptoms of intussusception, such as vomiting, fever, and abdominal pain, they should be evaluated by a healthcare provider.

VAERS (Vaccine Adverse Event Reporting System) is a voluntary reporting system that collects information on adverse events following vaccination. If you suspect an adverse event, you can report it to VAERS by visiting www.vaers.hhs.gov or calling 1-800-822-7967.
