Immunize.org

Save lives. Immunize.

November 18, 2026

Dear Friend,

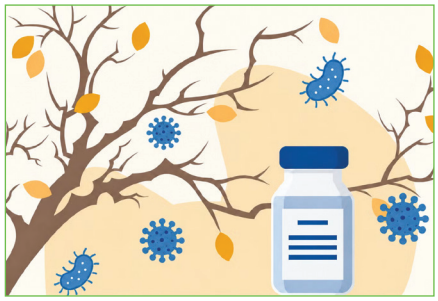

For more than three decades, Immunize.org has supported healthcare professionals with clinical resources and evidence-based immunization guidance. In a second year of dramatic shifts in federal policies, intervention by federal courts, the emergence of alternative immunization recommendations from medical societies, and escalating vaccine-preventable disease outbreaks, our focus has not wavered. We continue to be a trustworthy source of sound, scientific support for vaccination providers in every state and setting.

Science-Based Guidance, Clearly Sourced

Immunize.org's resources were long known for their consistent alignment with the guidance of the career experts at CDC. Where published CDC guidance remains scientifically valid, we continue to use it. We also now reference the recommendations of respected major medical societies. In all cases, we indicate the source of guidance clearly. Behind the scenes, our collaboration with immunization partners has expanded, with our policy work focused on sustaining affordable access to, and demand for, all recommended vaccines.

Putting Answers at Your Fingertips

This year, your generous contributions enabled us to:

'Tis the season: our new Seasonal Vaccines web page assembles resources for influenza, COVID-19, and RSV prevention

- Support more than 53,000 visits each day across our three websites in September 2026, including more than 47,000 to Immunize.org.
- Create an online searchable database of vaccination recommendations from medical societies and other healthcare professional organizations
- Launch Getting Started, a new web section that introduces new vaccinators to foundational vaccination resources
- Gather available public vaccine locators on our Where to Get Vaccinated page after the federal vaccine locator service stopped functioning
- Increase our audience on YouTube, Facebook, Instagram, and LinkedIn by 25% across all platforms, including 142% growth on Instagram
- Establish the Summit Adult Vaccine Recommendations Review (SAVRR) Council, a diverse coalition of stakeholders supporting implementation of evidence-based vaccination recommendations in the absence of functional federal advisory groups
- Reach nearly 50,000 subscribers weekly through IZ Express

Your Generosity Matters More Than Ever

After 32 years of continuous support, our partners at CDC are no longer able to fund our immunization education efforts. This means that your gift is more important than ever. Together, we continue to support all healthcare professionals to provide excellent, accessible, and affordable immunization services to people of all ages.

With sincere gratitude for your continued partnership,

Kelly L. Moore MD, MPH
President and CEO
